—With regard to Immigration, I think something may be done whereby many virtuous and industrious families may be brought over from the United Kingdom of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and I am determined to do my best to effect this, that without trade and agriculture, having lost an helping hand to reclaim the once wild and inhospitable forests of this country, we are now in great danger; and having also a numerous family, we are in a position to help those who are in distress.

—I think the Colonists are truly and faithfully, as we, whose interests are so well known, stand in a quandary; and I hope to stand in a quandary to what I have already done, the best guarantee for the performance of this duty.

—Institutions having been made, that in the event of my being returned to represent your borough, I shall make use of my office to advance Newcastle, to the regality and detriment of the two Maitlands, I deny it; as in the first instance, the Maitlands, who are in the same district, cannot be benefited without the latter participating in its advantage; and in the second place, it is evident to every thinking person that particular institutions thrive best in the Colony, and particularly of those countries where there is a large proportion of religion, but that a fair field should be given to all.

—Should you, therefore, honour me by sending your representative in the future, I will be determined to go to the office and employed to my duty, or to the contrary, I will do my best to promote our general welfare.

—I am anxious to see that the Colonists are not to be left to themselves, and that they may have a good opportunity to improve their condition.

GENERAL POETRY.

RECOLLECTIONS OF ENGLAND.
Written by an exile at Sydney, New South Wales, on the departure of H.M.S. Fingal, to England, 21st January, 1845.
By one who has passed through
Old Egypt, &c., &c.

True beauty ('tis no fancy),
I would depart with thee,
Thou pond'rous iron battery,
Across the dark blue sea :
Add me, Finistere, God will guide
Thee to thy native climes,
To reach Old England's chosen tide,
Proud for numberless' times.

But when shall I behold that land,
The fairest of the fair,
At whose bright names all hearts expand,
For many a thought is there ?
And where's the soul that yearns
Strangers and exiles ev'ry where,
For those alone sous les bâtons,

Here at the far Antipodes ;
The world's wide sons hold round,
My chest in shiny seals they brese,
Mine eyes have never known sound ;
They fly, change scenes, and paths can trace,
The souls and ancient halls that grace
Thy country, native land.

Each Sabbath twice ten thousand bells
Sound o'er thy people plains ;
Their music to thy children tells,
All gladness, health, and pain.

Are laid to rest !—O, heart-broaching aisle,
Would I could grieve them thus,
And hear thy voices, and feel thy smile,
Once more before I die.

Sometimes—thy vast cathedral-fane,
My thoughts to thee withdraw :
The windows sh'd with gorgeous panes,
O'er which the sunbeams play,

In safety through some nail'd nave
Old chants their notes diffuse ;
In York I ponder o'er a grave,—
In Canterbury mass.

Again—thy crumpling castle-heaps
Shadowy forms unfold,
Dark towers, Norman keeps,
Piled up like castles old.

O Sarah, Rochester, and those
London's time-black Tower,"

Methinks I see thy spires now,
The wrecks of feudal power.

Cambridge, I love thy western form,
Thine ivy'd walls, thy shadowy bower,

By night and day in maled storm,
Thine images appear.

Oxford, remembrance often roves
From these wild woods, among

The palace-walled groves, and groves,
Of ancient shade, and young.

And memory brings before mine eye
Some drawing-room scenes, and cold,

Round young Victoria, thine on high,

Peas, prunes, ladies, wait ;

Outside, the cuirass'd squadron stand

With hats and plumed plumes, and brass'd band,

And countless horses around.

And where these wondering feet have stood
To meet the seeking view—

All seem just finish'd, squares, and cold,

Antipodal and new.

O may I see again that land,
The fairest of the fair,

At whose bright names all hearts expand,

O may I stop my steps once more—

Will to that "Home" be bent,

To land upon the shaly shore,

And breathe my last, adieu !

ERUL CANTIENTIS.

BRISTOL.—JUBILEE OF THE BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The jubilee of this society, in celebration of the 50th year of its establishment, commenced on Thursday evening last, in Countership Chapel, Bristol, Robert Leonard, Esq., in the chair. The Rev. Joseph Russell, of Melksham, Secretary to the Jubilee Society, moved the first resolution. The Rev. William Knibb moved the next resolution, which referred to the mission in Africa and the East, in a very eloquent and appropriate address of great length. Towards the close of his speech, Mr. Knibb stated that Mr. Merrick, of whose qualifications he spoke in high terms, was about to proceed from Jamaica, on a mission to Africa, for his outfit on which expedition £500 was required; but said Mr. Knibb, such was the enthusiasm of the speaker and his hearers, I hope, that before this meeting breaks up, some gentlemen will have contributed that sum. The Rev. J. Jackson rose to second the resolution, but had not finished the first sentence of his speech, when Mr. Knibb begged to be excused interrupting him, a gentleman had given the £500. (The cheering is scarcely necessary to say, was most enthusiastic.) We learn that the gentleman who thus munificently patronises the Baptist missions, is R. B. Sherring, Esq., of Ashly-place. A liberal collection was then made in a public breakfast at King's Cross church on Friday morning, and the collection, including the above donation, and of £200 from Mr. Leonard, Esq., the chairman, amounted to £1,400.

CROYDON HALL.—This elegant edifice, which has been long in a state of dilapidation and ruin, has been completely restored, in accordance with the original style of architecture, and will shortly open to the public inspection. Originally erected in 1472, by Sir John Crook, it was occupied by Richard III., when crook'd-backed Richard was aspiring to the Crown; and his residence here has been immortalized by Shakespeare's reference to the fact. Another sort of interest is attached to the building, as the abode of the learned and upright More, whose "Utopia" is supposed to have been composed beneath its roof. The rich Spencer, beneath whose roof, was buried in 1599, in the church of the Comptons by the marriage of his daughter and heiress with the ancestor of the present Marquess of Northampton, celebrated his majority at Crosby House, in 1594, and gave a feast there, which surpassed in splendour the entertainments afforded in all former mayoralities. It was assigned for the reception of Sully, on his mission to James I. Subsequently it sunk into neglect, was occupied as a packer's warehouse, and suffered much injury while so appropriated. Its main features, however, remained, even amongst the vandals of Bishopsgate, untouched; and on the termination of the lease a few years ago public feeling was in some degree excited with regard to the interesting building, almost the only remaining specimen in the metropolis of the domestic architecture of our ancestors, and a subscription was entered into for its restoration. The funds, however, proved inadequate to that purpose, and it remained comparatively in a ruined condition until a few spirited individual with a view to preserve it from further decay, and to appropriate it to public purposes, restored it to nearly its original splendour. The style in which the repairs have been accomplished reflects considerable credit upon Mr. Davies, the architect, who has succeeded in preserving the original character in all the details which have been introduced to adapt it to its proposed uses. It is satisfactory to the citizens who yet remain to the citizens that Crosby Hall will be connected with the fast and intelligent of the present age by being devoted to the purposes of a literary institution, and that it will be opened on the 27th of this month, with an introductory address by Professor Bell, of King's College, the president of the institution. "I will tell you the sense of the meeting against you," said the Lord Mayor to Wilkes, who immediately replied, "I will take the sense of the meeting and beat you out and out."
